

Dmitry Plotnikov is a senior economist in the Macro Policy Division of the IMF's Strategy, Policy and Review Department. Dmitry's divisional responsibilities include implementation of the Framework for Data Provision to the Fund for Surveillance Purposes. Since joining the Fund in 2013, he has worked on a variety of countries in Western Hemisphere, Middle East and Asia as well as taught courses to government officials during his time in the Institute for Capacity Development. Dmitry's research interests range from fiscal and monetary policy, macro-econometrics to climate change and crime. Prior to joining the Fund, he received a Ph.D. in Economics from the University of California, Los Angeles.

